Q: What are the differences between JavaFX and Swing? JavaFX seems to solve most of my problems with graphical user interfaces by doing away with the need for control architectures such as MVC and MVP. Other than this, what are the differences between JavaFX and Swing?

A: JavaFX is a new GUI framework developed in Java. It is based on core Java and uses the JavaFX framework which provides much of the feature functionality. It provides an improved CSS engine and offers other features like animation and more. Swing is a GUI library for Java. It has nothing to do with JavaFX. JavaFX is a server side technology and runs on top of Swing. You can reuse controls from Swing for your FX application.
